A MESSAGE FROM GALLATIN ALUMNI RELATIONS

This May, students across the country will graduate from college, but few will have had an educational experience comparable to the one you have had at Gallatin. For some of you, the degree you receive today represents the fully realized vision that you had when you first applied to the School. For others, it is the result of thoughtful self-discovery aided by the coursework you completed and by the counsel of Gallatin faculty and advisers. Whether your course was straightforward, discursive, or somewhere in between, we hope you look back with pride when you think of the unique and exceptional education that you created for yourself here.

Gallatin's intent was to guide you as creative thinkers, eclectic career-builders, and ambitious citizens, and our support for your work does not end when you graduate. Today, you join a network of scholars, artists, entrepreneurs, scientists, and educators. We view the time you spent as a Gallatin student as the beginning of a lifelong, mutually beneficial affiliation with the School. Faculty will continue to delight in your achievements and you will be invited back to the School for events and programs.

We hope you will become an active participant in Gallatin's distinguished community of alumni, and that your energy and expertise will help grow this already vibrant community. The Gallatin alumni network continues to expand and to gain strength in many areas of the country—and in a variety of disciplines. However you choose to contribute, we welcome your involvement!

Today we recognize all that you have already achieved and we look forward to celebrating your future successes.

Congratulations to the Class of 2020!

ABOUT GALLATIN

The Gallatin School of Individualized Study is named after Albert Gallatin, one of the founders of NYU, who served as the Secretary of the Treasury under Presidents Jefferson and Madison. Gallatin believed that New York City needed a college that would serve its varied urban population and which would “elevate the standard of learning and . . . render knowledge more accessible to the community at large.” Gallatin’s dream was realized in 1831 with the founding of New York University.

As in the preceding century, the demands of the late-20th century called for innovations in higher education. NYU’s response was the founding, in 1972, of an experimental program called University Without Walls (UWW), which became the Gallatin Division in 1976. The success of the Division led to the establishment, in 1995, of the Gallatin School of Individualized Study.

For more than four decades, Gallatin has developed an educational approach that offers a unique combination of flexibility and rigor. The School attracts bright, self-directed, and highly motivated students who take initiative in designing their own educations. Gallatin students create unique projects and investigate different areas of knowledge across the disciplines and benefit from the teaching and mentoring of a distinguished faculty of scholars, advisers, and from the wealth of offerings available in one of the world’s great universities and urban centers.
